

ABSTRACT

This invention is a cleaning device that is used in its preferred embodiment to wipe fluid from a dipstick. The invention comprises an opposing pair of matching features that are mounted to the interior of a rigid, folding enclosure. When fastened around a dipstick, the matching features in the preferred embodiment wipe the dipstick free of fluid.